Association for Diverse Learners

DO YOU HAVE...

- ▶ challenges with spelling or understanding written text?
- ▶ trouble filling out forms or reading maps?
- ▶ difficulty distinguishing between 59 and 95?
- ▶ concentration problems?
- ▶ close relatives with learning disabilities?

You may have a learning disability, like approximately one in every five of us.

A person with a learning disability has a different way of learning and processing information, due to differences in their brain structure and function.

A learning disability may manifest as challenges such as dyslexia, developmental language disorder, difficulty in mathematics, difficulty with perception and attentiveness issues.

WHAT HELPS?

- Knowledge is power!
- Learn to utilise different learning aids and applications in your everyday life.
- Find out your strengths.
- Ask your special education teacher, student guidance counsellor or amanuensis about different opportunities for individual study arrangements.
- Talk about your learning disability at the workplace and negotiate special arrangements (tips for workplaces at lukijose.fi/materiaalipankki > learning disability and working life).
- If you need support, contact JOSE. No diagnosis required.
